CONSERVATION CONGRESS STANDS FOR DEVELOPMENT

DR. G. E. CONDRA, NEW PRESIDENT, NATIONAL CONSERVATION CONGRESS—WATER POWER DAM IN CONSTRUCTION

WASHINGTON—(Special)—Private industrial development of the great water power resources of the United States was emphatically endorsed by the National Conservation Congress, which has just come to a close in this city. After a stormy three hours' debate, the Congress, the great conservation body of the country, recorded its official approval of this principle by a vote of three to one.

The spectacular feature of the fight was the turning down of Gifford Pinchot by the Conservation Congress, of whose executive committee he was a member. Pinchot charged that the Congress was packed and was met with the declaration that his charge, mayor and chamber of commerce president, who had been invited to appoint the delegates which made up the meeting. The result of the debate—the endorsement of the Shields and Myers water power bills—is taken by the members to mean that the big conservation body had grown tired of a tying-up of the country's resources and was ready and anxious to put itself on record on these specific legislative measures providing for development of resources. The development of water power, which conservationists recognize as the greatest natural resource the country has, has been brought almost to stagnation by the failure of legislation looking to its development. Business men with capital have stood ready to start on the hazardous undertaking of harnessing great rivers in order to provide cheaper power and light, as well as cheaper fertilizers for the farmer and a greater supply of explosives for our army and navy, through the new process of taking nitrogen from the air by means of water power. They have been met with the cry of "trust" and "monopoly" until, as business men, they were almost ready to abandon their efforts. The action of the Conservation Congress, however, in placing its stamp of approval on a plan to permit private industry to go ahead and develop water powers, under a limited franchise and carefully governed restrictions, is regarded as the most important step to water power conservation that has been made in recent years.

Such men as Hugh Le Cooper, the engineer of international reputation who built the Keokuk dam as well as big water power plants at Niagara and on the Susquehanna River, have been prominent in the power fight. The President and members of his Cabinet and members of Congress, without regard to political affiliations, have been advocating strongly the necessity of legislative action that will put an end to a stagnation in the development of this wonderful resource. Almost every other nation of any size, it has been pointed out, is ahead of America in the use of water power. This fact, it is said, coupled with the growing demand of the people of the United States that something be done so that the country can utilize, as well as conserve, this vast resource, is regarded as the basis of the decisive action by the Conservation Congress.

The meeting was made up of prominent experts in both federal and state governments, senators and representatives and prominent men from practically every state in the Union. Dr. Henry S. Drinker, president of Lehigh University, was chairman of the committee on resolutions, which included a governor of a state, several senators, and other men of affairs from forty-two states.

Daisy O. Rindard were united in marriage by the Rev. J. P. McCormick, of 139 Terra Cotta street.

YOUNG WOMAN'S ASSOCIATION IN INDIA

Is of the Earnest, Zealous Kind and Should Impress Clarksburg People.

To the ordinary traveler Delma Dun in India is the station which marks the end of a long railway journey and the place to get a good breakfast after a long fast. What a different significance this "Valley of the Tents" has to about thirty Indian women students and a few others. They were not ordinary travelers. They were delegates to the Young Woman's Christian Association conference for North India students. Turning aside from the main road they reached the American Presbyterian Girls' School, where the conference was to be held for five days.

The teachers and students of the girls' high school were the hostesses. They had made every effort for the comfort of the guests. The program was varied. Each day provided just what was needed. Bible classes followed by mission study classes began the day. One girl said, "That which helped me most was the study of Amos. We learned that although he was only a herdman, yet God prepared him for a great work; so even if we are not in a high position, God has a calling and a work for us in His Kingdom if we are willing."

Another girl said, "The thing that impressed me most was that our leader said we could always do some missionary work in everything." All the large meetings were held in the mission church. Leading from this "little church in the woods" was a violet-edged path to the bungalow of the "head of the mission." It was here that they held their fringed gatherings each night after supper. They sang hymns sometimes, followed by a talk. There was recreation, without which no Young Woman's Christian Association conference would be ideal. There were inter-school tournaments, and one whole afternoon was set aside as Tamasaka day, or stunt day.

The campfire song was sung with great gusto, but the fires of genius flamed brighter in the dining room between courses, when extemporaneous songs were sung in praise of everything in general. No one could forget the beauty of the sunrise meeting on the roof on Sunday morning. Through the tree tops could be seen the sun rising over the distant hills as they sang "Holy! Holy! Holy!" and "Still, Still With Thee When Purple Morning Breaketh."

The last evening as they gathered around the fire for the farewell meeting the question was asked: "What has Jesus Christ thought of this conference?" They were all of one mind. It had been a time of fellowship and real blessing. They realized clearly, however, that the One who had been with them throughout now looked to them to transfer into service that which they had received.

The national organization shares in the establishment and development of the movement in other countries, particularly mission lands. It provides secretaries of training by securing their support either from individuals or associations in this country and by contributions to the general work.

The primary purpose is always to prepare the women of the country for leadership. The foreign secretary's work is measured not by what she does, but by what she makes it possible for the women to do for themselves. Forty-seven secretaries have gone out from the United States to participate in foreign Young Woman's Christian Association work. The secretaries in which the world's Young Woman's Christian Association work is now being carried on are North, South, West and British East Africa, Canada, Argentina, Brazil, Chile, China, India, Burmah, Ceylon, Straits Settlements, Japan, Turkey in Asia, Australia, New Zealand, Austria, Denmark, Finland, France, Germany, Greece, Holland, Hungary, Italy, Malta, Norway and Sweden, Portugal, Russia, Belgium, Turkey and Bulgaria.

WAIVES EXAMINATION.

D. M. Morris, arrested recently under a charge of violating the prohibition law by carrying whiskey in South Third street, waived examination Monday night before Magistrate C. L. Watkins, of Shinnston, in Magistrate Jackson V. Carter's court here and was held for the grand jury under the usual bonds, which he furnished.

At the instance of the prosecuting attorney, the case of Jennings McCune, arrested recently under a charge of bootlegging, was continued for two weeks Monday night by Magistrate C. L. Watkins, of Shinnston, sitting in Magistrate Jackson V. Carter's court here.

WARRANT DISMISSED.

Magistrate J. W. Wadsworth, of Lumberport, sitting in Magistrate V. Carter's court Monday night, dismissed a warrant charging Harry Anglin with having intoxicants in a public place. Magistrate Wadsworth held that the prosecuting witnesses did not produce evidence sufficient to justify holding Anglin.
